

DEAD ON A FRIDAY

Bio

When Queens, New York natives Dave Fox (vocals, bass) and Jessen (guitar) founded Dead On A Friday in 2002, they could not have imagined that three drummers, several hazardous apartments, a nervous breakdown, and countless hours of therapy would be in the cards for them. It would take all this however, as well as the inclusion of Nick Ferony (drums), to develop Dead On A Friday's sound and record an album five years in the making.

Hope It Was Worth It documents the band's personal struggles, with songs that range from the cautiously optimistic to the hopelessly depressed. Fan favorites like "So Much Fun" capture the energy and angry sarcasm of the first year, while newer tracks like "Didn't You Know" and "A Damn Shame" showcase more mature songwriting and a wistful yearning for better days. Successfully fusing the speed and melodies of West Coast punk with East Coast attitude, Hope It Was Worth It delivers thirteen infectious tracks of raw emotion and brutally honest lyrics.

Dead On A Friday's most ambitious project to date, their full-length debut proves that a band meant for something bigger than themselves never gives up.

Press

Print

"Dead On A Friday does what most bands these days seem to have forgotten how, delivering thirteen from-the-heart rockers without a big budget or any major backing...This disc delivers, no filler, all heart."

-Johnny X, Guitarist for Sticks and Stones

"Dead On A Friday play an aggressive yet melodic blend of punk rock with a tinge of Social Distortion and a healthy helping dose of Bad Religion thrown in for good measure."

-Karol Khaos, NY Waste

"...really fast melodic punk...(The) Lemonheads on speed."

-Peter Thorsson, SKRUTT Magazine (Sweden)

"...contagious hooks and genuine punk rock... will definitely impact fans of Bad Religion, Guttermouth, and the like."

-Mike SOS, Amp Magazine
